Technology:

Google Sites

Creating websites allow students to share their scholarship with a broad audience and contribute to the

Learning Goals:

This course aims for students to become more acutely aware of and fluent in the historical composition, circulation and criticism of private and public discourses, the verbal material through which we construct and influence our social worlds. It is my hope that this course will challenge and inspire you to wield both pen and voice with rhetorical precision, to ‘stand and speak’ to issues that mark your own lives and times.

Class Size: 12-25

Description:

Prof. Spring had her students create websites as part of a Museum Exhibit for the National Abolitionist Hall of Fame in Peterboro, NY. Their research and annotated bibliographies will be viewed by visitors both at the museum and online.