

Call for Applications: The Lampert Associates Program Lampert Institute for Civic and Global Affairs

During the 2017-18 academic year, Colgate's Lampert Institute for Civic and Global Affairs will offer programming focused on the theme of "Human Rights." In conjunction with those activities, the Lampert Institute is accepting applications for a select group of Colgate students from all years, who will be designated Lampert Associates. The Lampert Associates will consist of students who commit to being closely involved in the Institute's activities over the academic year. This involvement will include attending talks/events (about 5 per semester), meeting with speakers for informal discussion and meals, and on occasion reading articles or book chapters in conjunction with speakers' visits. Please note that these are not paid positions or internships.

Further information about this semester's speakers is available here, and further information about the annual "Human Rights theme is available here.

In the spring we expect to bring in speakers discussing issues related to LGBTQ, workers, civil, and environmental rights (amongst others).

Students who wish to participate in the Lampert Associates program should submit a brief letter expressing their interest and qualifications (up to one page), unofficial transcripts, and the name of a Colgate faculty member who might be contacted as a reference. Note that we will accept applications from students who will only be able to participate for one semester, given study abroad commitments; please indicate any such commitments in the letter of application.

Application materials should be sent by email to Jason Kawall, Director of the Lampert Institute, at jkawall@colgate.edu. The deadline for application is 12pm (noon), Monday, September 18th.
